SESSION #08 | MAY 17, 2022

ELISABETH CAMP (Rutgers University) | "From Point of View to Perspective"

In both ordinary speech and theoretical discourse, we often talk about 'points of view' and 'perspectives' to gesture toward ways in which agents differ in their interpretations of a common informational content. While such perceptual language is ubiquitous and intuitive, its application to abstract domains like religion, politics, art, and science must be metaphorical. I introduce three analogies with perception, sketch my own view of a perspective as an open-ended disposition to notice, structure, and respond to information in an intuitive, holistic way, and identify some payoffs of this analysis.
